On 6 & 7 June, 2018, London's ExCeL will play host to the two most important days of the year for Europe's leading oncology professionals.

Under one roof, the European Oncology Convention will showcase the latest research, innovations and techniques transforming the study, diagnosis and treatment of cancerous tumours.

Here's five of the main reasons why thousands of cancer healthcare professionals, researchers, clinicians and their management teams will ensure that they attend next month's show:

1) A Focus on Three Key Areas

The European Oncology Convention 2018 will provide its visitors with expertise and insight into three specialised areas of the oncology field - head & neck, gastrointestinal and lung cancer. Across both days of the event, 85 expert-led seminars will cover every facet of these three cancer-types in incredible depth and detail.

2) For Clinicians & Researchers

No other event of its kind in the UK is able to bring such a quality and variety of oncology professionals to one venue. Over two days, the top oncology clinicians and researchers will converge on London to discover the developments within this ever-changing field.

3) 100 World-Leading Exhibitors

More than 100 of the most cutting-edge suppliers within the oncology field will exhibit their latest products, technologies and techniques at the show. Many of these companies will be exhibiting innovations from around the world that the event's visitors will have seen nowhere else.

4) CPD-Accredited Seminars

At the European Oncology Convention, every single one of the show's 85 educational talks is CPD-accredited - meaning visitors can progress with their professional development while picking up expert advice. This unrivalled seminar lineup will be delivered by leaders from the most prominent hospitals, organisations and institutions in the oncology field.

5) Part of Prysm Medical

This year, the European Oncology Convention will run side-by-side with the European Neuro Convention and Medical Imaging Convention for the very first time - bringing the three exhibitions within PRYSM's esteemed Medical Division under one roof. And what's more, every visitor to the Oncology Convention will get free and unlimited access to the other two shows.
